REPORT OF ICCTA

Carol Chiligiris, Bruce Campbell, and Randy Prince attended the 2009 ACCT Community College National Legislative Summit in Washington, DC, on February 8-11, 2009. Community college trustees and leaders joined together to lobby on education, job training and economic development policy issues in Congress. Carol Chiligiris reported that the Summit was worthwhile to all those in attendance, and the large presence of community colleges show that they care and are willing to spend money to travel to DC to get the message heard.

First-time attendee Bruce Campbell commented that the Summit was an ‘eye-opening’ experience. It was the hope that the message was received that in perilous economic times, the community colleges become all the more important in terms of retraining. So many people are losing their jobs and positions, and the effort that community colleges can make to help them achieve a new beginning in their lives and a different livelihood than they had previously must be supported.

Randy Prince further commented that community colleges are starting to come of age and people are not seeing them as junior colleges but as the front line in recovery time. There were excellent speakers at the conference; an economist explained how he thought the stimulus package was going to affect the economy and what was going on in the economy and why.

The next ICCTA meeting will be in Oak Brook, Illinois, on March 13-14, 2009.
